It's a terrible thing to be sure,
 When you're batting in confident wise,
 If a ball, coming straight for your stumps,
 Seems going to leg in your eyes,
 You whirl yourself round on one leg,
 And lift up your bat in the air,
 And look to the boundary fence,
 But the ball, oh, the ball isn't there!

But more terrible is it by far
 When a ball, coming straight to your legs,
 (As you think when you wildly hit out)
 Gets you fairly and square on the pegs.
 And then if the umpire gives out,
 Such cheating you always deplore;
 In the eyes of the batsmen themselves
 They never are out leg before.

BROWNING.

(Abt. Vogler, Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha, a Toccata of Galuppi's.)

It seemed a palace-chamber vast and rich,
 Where souls of poets, some clean quit o' the world,
 Some freed awhile for breathing-space, unfurled
 The wings erst trammelled in their earthly niche
 Some their light lyres to woo sweet love did twitch;
 By some, air-shattering battle-calls were hurled
 From trumpets cannon-mouthed about them
 curled;
 Some fluted sorrow in keys of plaintive pitch.

So rang all thoughts, all moods, all passions,
 blent
 From viol and reed, from voice and instrument:
 Queen Music listened: each awaits her crowning.
 But she—"Ye all made music for me well;
 "One here may meetliest mine award compel;
 Thy thought, thy song, are of me, Robert Browning. V.
